The Revised FSA Remuneration Code

A Practical Guide to its Implementation

America Square Conference Centre, London EC3

The Revised FSA Remuneration Code is critically important, both for those firms that are currently 'in-scope' (the largest banks, building societies and broker-dealers) and those that are going to be brought 'in-scope' with effect from 1st January next year. This latter group includes all banks and building societies, asset managers, hedge fund managers, UCITS investment firms, and many other firms that engage in corporate finance, venture capital, the provision of financial advice, brokers and multilateral trading facilities.

While the FSA's July 2010 consultation paper provided some clarity in relation to the FSA's proposals on how the rules will be implemented on a national basis, it did not give the full picture. There are ambiguities in the Capital Requirements Directive III text, which will only be resolved once the Committee of European Banking Supervisors (CEBS) has completed the consultation on its proposed guidelines (the consultation closes on 8th November). It is clear that these restrictions will be even tougher than originally expected, perhaps forcing wholesale restructuring of pay policies.

As a result of having to wait for the CEBS' guidelines, the final version of the Revised Code will now not be published until December, leaving very little time for those firms affected to review the new rules before the 1st January implementation date. While the approximately 2,500 firms that are being brought 'in-scope' for the first time will have the benefit of transitional arrangements, those firms that are already 'in-scope' will be expected to comply ab initio.

We are delighted to confirm that David Raikes, Manager, Remuneration Project, FSA will deliver the keynote address on The FSA's Policy Statement and Final Rules.

The programme will include:

- The FSA's policy statement and final rules
- The Committee of European Banking Supervisors and remuneration policy
- Remuneration structures under the revised Code
- The implications of the Code for risk management
- Provisions relating to conflicts of interest
- Corporate governance and the Code
- Non-cash payments, ways and means
- Profit based measurement and claw back
- Implementation – proportionality and risk adjustment
- The impact on private equity and asset management

Attendance at this conference will therefore be crucial for all regulated firms that fall within the ambit of the Revised FSA Remuneration Code, as it will provide a very timely opportunity for them to grasp the implications of the new rules and ensure that they are compliant with them. Those who should attend include senior management of all financial institutions, including chief executives, chief operating officers, other main board directors, heads of business units, heads of human resources, heads of risk, heads of internal audit, heads of treasury, heads of compliance and legal and in-house counsel.
